Context

As you may be aware, SA Health has commissioned a review of the current model of service delivery for sexual health in the state, with emphasis on the development of a new model that will address the needs of South Australians now and into the future. The project is being conducted for RPR Consulting by Ann Porcino and Lisa Ryan and is being managed by the Communicable Diseases Control Branch of SA Health.

The project commenced in March 2021 and now is in the consultation phase. To date, the consultants have heard that there is excellent work being done to diagnose, treat and manage STIs in the specialist services and in some GP practices. They have, however, also heard that there are significant gaps in access, particularly in the northern and southern suburbs of Adelaide and in rural and regional areas.

Attached is a brief description of the project.

About the meetings

We are keen to talk with you about your insights into the sexual health service system and about potential options for the future model (based on what is emerging through the consultations to date.) The meeting will be facilitated by Lisa Ryan.
